Masonya Bennett	+1 618.650.2891	masbenn@siue.edu	My teaching and research interests concern African, Caribbean and Afro-Latinx immigration in the U.S. South, Black popular culture(s) in the African Diaspora, race and processes of racialization in Latin America and the Caribbean, and the implications of space, place, material culture, and affect in the formation of black subjectivity, identity and solidarity throughout the African Diaspora. I firmly believe in utilizing interdisciplinary approaches to the fields of Cultural Anthropology, Sociology, Human/Cultural Geography as well as Africana, Latin American, and Ethnic Studies. As an educator within these fields, the classroom as a stage and as an arena takes on even more significance as we discuss and display the sometimes unknown and untold histories, legacies, experiences, and perspectives of underrepresented groups of people in the Diaspora.
Carol Colaninno-Meeks	+1 618.650.2361	ccolani@siue.edu	Research Activities: I have two main research foci: human-environmental interactions and archaeological education. As a zooarchaeologist, I am interested in understanding the ways people in the past used fish populations and communities. Further, I work with fish ecologists to understand how this human-fish interaction has changed through millennia. My work generally involves identifying osteological remains recovered from archaeological sites and comparing them with modern comparative skeletons of known taxonomic identification. My work has also led me to investigate the stable isotopic composition of bone collagen to understand how biochemistry of collagen in fishes and other organisms has changed over time. My other line of research is understanding how people teach and learn archaeological and other STEM topics. Much of this work has focused on building more student-focused, field-based research programs that incorporate a strong undergraduate research component. With archaeology so focused on field-based learning, I hope to best understand how to build field-based learning models that are safe, inclusive, and follow best practices in teaching and learning.

Susan Kooiman	+1 618.650.2724	skooima@siue.edu	My archaeological research interests focus on foodways, pottery, and the precontact Indigenous peoples of North America, and so it follows that my teaching interests are rooted in the same passions. I love both introducing students to the basic concepts of anthropology and archaeology and taking them deeper into the topics of North American prehistory, diet, and technology. As a proponent of experiential learning, I also enjoy teaching laboratory and field methods.
