

Kennesaw State University, Department of Geography & Anthropology

Program Information

Program Name	Kennesaw State University, Department of Geography & Anthropology
General Description / Special Programs	Bachelor of Science Degree in Anthropology: The BS degree prepares students for work in anthropology professions, related careers, and graduate programs. The program offers training in all four fields of anthropology and valuable lab, field, and internship experiences. Minor in Anthropology: The Minor in Anthropology prepares students for work in professions and fields that require an understanding of the effects of culture on human behavior. This is becoming increasingly useful as the cultural diversity of our society and workplaces and the international focus of businesses and research have created a demand for professionals with anthropological training. The Minor in Anthropology consists of 15 credit hours of coursework. Certificate in Geographic Information Science (GIS): The Geographic Information Science (GIS) certificate program is designed to provide a practical set of GIS marketable skills to traditional students who wish to access the GIS market. Students from different majors can include the GIS certificate courses into their degree program. Non-conventional students and professionals can improve and update their GIS knowledge and then enhance their GIS career. The Certificate in Geographic Information Science consists of 15 credit hours of coursework. Certificate in Land Surveying: The Land Surveying Certificate program is designed to prepare surveyors with the basic education necessary to take the Fundamentals of Land Surveying Exam and meets the State of Georgia academic registration requirements to become a Professional Land Surveyor. The Land Surveying Certificate consists of 18 credit hours of coursework.
