

Conference on Mediterranean and European Linguistic Anthropology

Program Information

Program Name	Conference on Mediterranean and European Linguistic Anthropology
General Description / Special Programs	The COMELA, The Annual Conference on Mediterranean and European Linguistic Anthropology, is an annual Conference and Society on Linguistic Anthropology with a focus on Mediterranean and European countries and regions. Scholars globally gather to engage in work on fields of Mediterranean and European Linguistic Anthropology, though this does not limit interest to those working on the Mediterranean and Europe, nor to Linguistic Anthropologists, Linguistics, or Anthropologists. Networking multiple universities, the Conference venue shifts annually, where the Conference Main Committee, advised by the Conference Scientific Committee, collaborates with the respective universities.

Misc Information	The Conference on Mediterranean and European Linguistic Anthropology symbolizes a significant movement forward for Linguistic Anthropology, to further problematize current perspectives and praxis in the field. The COMELA responds to concerns by those within Linguistics, Anthropology, Sociolinguistics, Sociology, Cultural studies, and Linguistic Anthropology, pertinent to The Mediterranean and Europe. The Association reduces the gap between focus on Mediterranean and European regions and work by Mediterranean and European and global academics, largely contributable to issues of funding and expertise. The COMELA thus aims to increasingly opportune academics to exchange knowledge, expertise, and valuable Linguistic and Anthropological data across the world, through the interpersonal and inter-institutional networks The COMELA conferences seek to build. To ground these efforts, The COMELA Conference networks a large and growing number of institutions globally, to support this much needed project.
