Research themes among Archaeology Department staff traditionally have focused on the origin and development of maize-agricultural societies (Whittlesey Tradition) living in northeastern Ohio prior to European contact (circa A.D. 1000 to 1650). This focus has broadened in the 21st Century to include culturally related social groups living in northwest Ohio (Sandusky Tradition) as well as earlier societies dating back as far as the late Ice Age. Some of the department’s current research projects are summarized here.
