

Ursinus College, Department of Anthropology and Sociology

Program Information

Program Name	Ursinus College, Department of Anthropology and Sociology
General Description / Special Programs	Anthropology and Sociology are related disciplines, studying the social life of groups. Many of the differences that exist between these two disciplines are the result of the original focus of anthropology on non-Western, generally small societies and the Western European origins of sociology, with its founders' focus on the social promise and pathologies of industrialization. We believe that our integration of the disciplines will permit students to better understand human behavior, because they will see the variety of solutions that different societies have developed to resolve human problems, rather than simply analyzing our own society.
