

Interdisciplinary Ethnography Field School

Program Information

Program Name	Interdisciplinary Ethnography Field School
General Description / Special Programs	This program will be delivered virtually for Summer 2021. The Summer Interdisciplinary Ethnography Field School in Mauritius program is targeted towards students across all fields in the social sciences and the humanities. In particular, it is suitable for students interested in interdisciplinary social scientific research, cultural and religious diversity, as well as area studies, thanks to its location and emphasis on Indian Ocean and African history, cultures, and religions. This course will provide an introduction to ethnographic fieldwork through daily virtual interactions with a group of Mauritian students, scholars, artists, activists, and other local people, who will open the doors to their world, —and even to their homes— to us. It will go through qualitative as well as quantitative methodologies, which will be applied to real-life data collection in collaboration with our Mauritian team. Moreover, it will examine key epistemological and ethical issues pertaining to the study of culture. Finally, it will provide an overview of Mauritian culture, with an emphasis on its extraordinary diversity. This program explores a truly unique setting. Mauritius is one of the most diverse societies in the world, where members of numerous ethnic, religious, and linguistic groups live and interact in close proximity. Due to its history and human geography, and as a prime example of multiculturalism, it provides an exceptional case study in issues such as colonialism, slavery, globalization, development, environmental challenges, religious pluralism, and societal change.
