<td>General Description</td>
<td>One of the world's premiere natural history museums, The Field Museum’s charter of 1893 dedicates its mission to the accumulation and dissemination of knowledge and objects illustrating Art, Archaeology, Science, and History. The Department of Anthropology was central to its founding and grew out of the collections and anthropological staff from the World's Columbian Exposition. Today, Anthropology is housed in the museum's Collections and Research Centers, and its faculty steward collections and conduct research on the rise of urbanism, as well as economic, environmental, and political anthropology, global heritage, and social resilience. FIELD MUSEUM-UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS AT CHICAGO JOINT PHD PROGRAM; NORTHWESTERN UNIVERSITY COLLABORATION.</td>

Other Field Areas
KELLER SCIENCE ACTION CENTER: The center works to translate science into action with measurable results on the ground. The team includes biologists and anthropologists who recognize the inextricable link between healthy nature and quality of life. Working in Chicago (Jacob Campbell, Ph. D., social science lead) and the Andes-Amazon region (Diana Alvira, Ph. D., social science lead and Chris Jarrett, Ph. D.), the center focuses on nature conservation and cultural heritage valuation through community partnerships, training, and nature stewardship.

Support Opportunities
Program Fellowships: Museum-wide competitive graduate scholarships, internships for high school through graduate students, Bass Visiting Scientist fellowships and interdisciplinary postdoctoral fellowships. www.fieldmuseum.org/about/careers/research-scholarships-and-grants

Library Resources
Approx 40,000 anthropology volumes; rare book collection

Internships Available
