

The College of Wooster, Department of Sociology and Anthropology

Program Information

Program Name	The College of Wooster, Department of Sociology and Anthropology
General Description / Special Programs	The Anthropology major incorporates theoretical and applied courses in archaeology, cultural, physical, and linguistic anthropology. The capstone of the major is the nationally recognized three-semester independent study thesis. Working closely with one faculty advisor, students take an anthropological research project from start to finish. Recent I.S. topics have included museum exhibits, green architecture, urban poverty and gentrification, the politics of organ donation, and the effects of tourism on rural communities.
